Embroidery Alphabet Design for Linens

This original and attractive alphabet design is given in two sizes. It can be adapted to tablecloths, napkins, lunch cloths, breakfast cloths, towels, laundry bags—in fact, anything for which initials are desired.

Pad with darning cotton and work in solid stitches. If desired, letters may be outlined and filled in with French knots or back stitches.

METHOD OF TRANSFERRING.

Dissolve a half teaspoonful of washing powder or a small piece of soap in two-thirds of a glass of water. To this add a tablespoonful of ammonia. Place the material on which the transfer is to be made on a hard, smooth surface, saturate the back of the design with the above solution, place the design face down on the material, laying a sheet of thick paper over the back of the design; hold firmly with one hand and with the bowl of a spoon rub, with pressure, from you. By following these directions carefully one to four transfers can be made.

NOTHING DIES

Of the Poets that I prize,
He is greatest in my eyes
Who proclaims the gladness of truth
Unto Age and unto Youth.
Nothing, nothing ever dies!

I, as I may pass away
From the present light of day
You, as you may pass along,
Joining the immortal throng;
But we've been, and so must be
On through all eternity;
Part and parcel ever of
An immortal span of Love,
All-embracing as the skies—
Nothing, nothing ever dies!

Now the fascinating flesh tint is seen even in makeup trimmings. The latest new imported lace are outlined with gold and silver. Some of the most extreme evening stockings are jet embroidered. Some of the new dress linens are like the silk crepes with broche figures. Now there is a new "furry" stitch in shadow embroidered flounces. White shadow lace and black net are used in neckwear for half mourning. Mourning styles and motifs seem to be as important as ever in millinery. Black soutache, braided on black net, is one of the new ideas for half mourning.

The Great Trials of History

Trial of Cato Street Conspirators.

All England was in a ferment of excitement in 1820 on account of the discovery of a plot to overthrow the King, to murder every member of the Cabinet, to seize the public buildings in London, and to proclaim a new government. This is known in history as the Cato Street Conspiracy for the reason that the conspirators met in a loft on Cato Street, London, and planned the outrage. The plan had been suggested three years previous, but the conspirators lacked a leader until they at length found Arthur Thistlewood. Thistlewood was an ex-officer in the British army. He had married two rich widows, squandered their fortunes, and in his travels in France and America conceived the idea of forcing a republican form of government upon England. He set about this by inciting riots and by other militant methods until finally the bigger conspiracy presented itself.

The conspirators knew that the Cabinet ministers sometimes met at informal dinners at each other's houses. Thistlewood arranged to be notified of the next dinner, and with a picked gang of thugs he planned to burst upon the diners and put them all to death. They were then to seize the Bank of England, the Mansion House and the Tower of London. After they had accomplished all this they planned to proclaim a "provisional government" for the country.

Edwards, one of Thistlewood's lieutenants, was chosen to find out the time of the meeting of the Cabinet, and he reported that they would gather at Lord Harrowby's house on the evening of February 22, 1820. So this date was set for the wholesale slaughter.

It was arranged that all the conspirators would meet early in the evening of this date, well armed, but two, who were to watch the mansion and report when the party were all assembled. When the watchers were satisfied that all the Cabinet were present, they set off to Cato Street to give the signal. Before they reached the loft, however, a cordon of police had surrounded the house. As they swooped down upon the criminals they fought like cornered rats, and Thistlewood and several companions succeeded in escaping.

A big reward was offered for their capture, and the ringleader was caught the following day. The way the plot was discovered was through Edwards, who was government spy, and had kept the government posted on every move of the plotters. And yet, as it eventually turned out, he was probably one of the worst of the criminal lot, and upon his escape, when things became too warm for him, a reward was offered for his capture, but this was never brought about.

On the 8th of March a special commission was issued to the Lord Chief Justices of England for the trial of the Cato Street conspirators, against whom true bills for high treason were found on the 27th, and the trials commenced with that of Thistlewood on the 17th of April. Eleven prisoners were included in the indictment.

At the trial the history and details of the plot were minutely detailed by Adams, an accomplice. Four more witnesses were called to confirm his statements. Hiden, who gave the warning to Lord Harrowby; the two Monuments and Dwyer, an Irish bricklayer. The defense attempted by the prisoners' counsel was necessarily of a desperate character. They admitted the intention to assassinate ministers, but urged that the whole evidence of high treason rested on the statements of the accomplices.

When called up for judgment, Thistlewood declared that "he was murdered, according to the etiquette of the court," because not allowed after the close of his counsel's speech to call witnesses to prove what a villain Dwyer was, and that Adams and Hiden were swindlers. At last Thistlewood became so violent in his address as to require the interference of the court.

Ings, another of the conspirators, threw the whole blame on Edwards, and denounced him as the real instigator. Though the usual sentence for high treason, with all its disgusting details, was passed on all the prisoners, the lives of those who had pleaded guilty were spared, and they were transported for life, and only Thistlewood, Ings, Brunt, Davidson and Tidd were executed. When Thistlewood, on the scaffold, was asked if he repented, he smiled and said: "Not at all. I shall soon know the last grand secret."

England was greatly excited over this Cato Street Conspiracy, and it became the conviction of a vast number that the whole kingdom was undermined by such plots, and that only the most strenuous exertions could protect the realm from an outbreak of horrors—and a season of absolute panic set in.

A Custom The World Over

Thousands of persons who know the advantage of pure, wholesome, easily digestible food have a dish of Grape-Nuts and cream for breakfast.

Grape-Nuts food, made of whole wheat and malted barley, is ready to eat direct from the package. It comes to your table in the form of golden-brown granules—crisp and nut-like—the delicate sweet taste due entirely to grape-sugar developed by the processes of manufacture.

Every year tens of thousands visit the Pure Food Factories of the Postum Cereal Co., Ltd., at Battle Creek, Mich., and see for themselves every step in the making of this famous food.

First the milling of wheat and barley; the mixing and kneading into a sort of dough—formed, for convenience in handling, into huge ro-pound loaves; then the baking, slicing, rebaking and grinding; and finally the filling, sealing and packing of the well-known, air-tight, yellow packages—all accomplished without the food being touched by hand.

Yes, visitors are taken all over the place—up-stairs and down. There is considerable to see, and

A UNIVERSAL FOOD

Following Nature's Footsteps.

"I have a boy, two years old, in perfect health, who has been raised on Grape-Nuts and milk."

"This is an ideal food and evidently furnishes the elements necessary for a baby as well as for adults. We have used Grape-Nuts in large quantities and greatly to our advantage."

One advantage about Grape-Nuts food is that it is partially pre-digested in the process of manufacture; that is, the starch contained in the wheat and barley is transformed into a form of sugar by the same method as this process is carried out in the human body. Moisture and long exposure to moderate warmth, which grows the diastase in the grains and makes the remarkable change from starch to sugar.

Therefore, the most delicate stomach can handle Grape-Nuts and the food is quickly absorbed into the blood and tissue, certain parts of it going directly for building and nourishing the tissue cells of body, brain and nerves.
